Having experienced my first full day in Uruguay, I have come to love this place.

The agenda for today was for Maita 's (the Condé Nast travel specialist) daughter Catalina to pick us up from Playa Vik at 11am. It was a pleasure to meet Catalina since I feel like I have come to know her mother so well. It appears as though Catalina may be following in her mother's footsteps by delving into the tourism business with her.

Once again, we had a driver for the day, but I was somewhat confused why we were driving out to the "ranch" lands to go wake boarding. We eventually found the driveway we were looking for, when out of nowhere, a lake within the hills emerges. The lake was made for slalom skiing, easily works for wake boarding as well. I loved the design of the rustic, thatched roof boathouse, covered dining area and bar with an asado at the top of the hill.

While picking out our life jackets, we met our boat driver, Tomas Bruce. An epic wake boarding session commenced, where everyone, including Catalina, got a chance to show their skill. We thoroughly entertained ourselves, cruising around in this lake tucked into the hills.

But you can't ignore, and you can't ignore, the headline is, at least, it's a headline, it's a headline.
